Medicinal chemistry is a field at the intersection of chemistry, biology, physiology, business, and ethics. This is a course for first-year, non-science major undergraduate students exploring the process of rational drug design, from discovery to use by patients.